To determine the efficacy and safety of a shortened interfraction interval (SII) in patients with locoregionally advanced (LA) breast cancer. Patients with LA T3-T4 N0-3 carcinoma of the breast who had undergone postoperative radiotherapy were eligible. Patients with contraindications to radiotherapy or those who refused radiotherapy were excluded from the study. A total of 58 eligible patients with LA breast cancer were randomly assigned to 2 groups of 29 patients each. The SII group received locoregional radiotherapy every week while the conventional treatment group received the same treatment twice a week. The primary end point of the study was overall survival. The 1- and 3-year overall survival rates were 62.3% and 30.7% in the SII group and 72.0% and 36.7% in the conventional group (p=0.143), respectively. The 1- and 3-year disease-free survival rates were 44.4% and 18.1% in the SII group and 56.7% and 20.9% in the conventional group (p=0.298), respectively. The 1- and 3-year overall survival rates were significantly lower in the conventional group than in the SII group (p=0.037). In LA breast cancer, a SII group showed inferior overall survival compared with a conventional treatment group.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a power transmission device of a vehicle in which a rotation of an engine is transmitted to a drive shaft coupled to a driving force-transmitting member. 2. Description of the Related Art A power transmission device is used for transmitting torque from an engine to driving wheels of a vehicle. A typical example of such a power transmission device is the automatic transmission (AT) which selects an appropriate gear and transmits torque to the selected gear in accordance with operation conditions of the vehicle. A control system of the transmission includes an electronic controller or a microcomputer that is electrically coupled to sensors and actuators that detect engine rotational speed, vehicle speed, and so forth. The control system receives a command from the accelerator pedal and a throttle actuator. The accelerator pedal has 3da54e8ca3
